

We need your help

We need your help. It will take you about 10 seconds and it won't cost you a dime.

On the cover of this issue, most of you will find a return postcard. Right now, please take out your pen, check off the box that says "Yes, please continue my free subscription to the Cleveland Clinic Journal of Medicine," sign your name, date it, and drop the card in the mailbox. That's it.

Under US Postal Service rules, if enough readers return their postcards, we will qualify for a less-expensive postal rate. The savings will allow us, a nonprofit journal, to direct more resources to what we do best: developing practical and timely educational articles for busy clinicians.

If your copy of this issue does not have a postcard on the cover, you are one of the many Journal readers who returned their subscription renewal cards from previous appeals. We thank you for that, and you won't have to return anything more until the next time you see an appeal on your issue. (Postal regulations require periodic renewals to maintain the reduced postal rate.)

We need several thousand more signatures to qualify for the reduced postal rate. Please do it now. You'll be helping to ensure that we can keep sending the Journal to you free each month and provide you with monthly opportunities to earn free CME credit.

JOHN D. CLOUGH, MD
Editor-in-Chief

PETER G. STUDER
Publisher