From the Editor

Why not a shot of prevention?

Last year the flu season was surprisingly mild, but this should not lull us into a lackadaisical approach to offering vaccination to all of our patients.

B.F. Mandell

1-Minute Consult

Should N-acetylcysteine be used routinely to prevent contrast-induced acute kidney injury?

Its routine use is not supported at this time, but there is evidence to suggest giving it to patients with baseline renal dysfunction.

S.K. Sivalingam, M.V. Hariharan, G.L. Braden, and B.J. Freda

The Clinical Picture

A rash after streptococcal infection

The patient, a 39-year-old woman, had been taking amoxicillin for streptococcal pharyngitis. What caused the rash?

N.K. Voore, A. Davis, and J. Fuscaldo

Review

Tattooing: Medical uses and problems

Tattooing is used in medical alerts, breast reconstruction, radiation oncology, endoscopy, forensic medicine, and other areas.

C.M. Glassy, M.S. Glassy, and S. Aldasouqi

Emergency contraception: Separating fact from fiction

Patients can now buy emergency contraceptives over the counter, but physicians should still take every opportunity to discuss effective contraceptive options.
