The electronic health record: Getting more bang for the click
Bemoaning the technology is not the answer—we need to refine the EHR, but we also need to do better documentation.

B.F. MANDELL

COMMENTARY .................................................................................. 406

Electronic siloing: An unintended consequence of the electronic health record
For all their purported benefits, electronic systems drive caregivers to work alone, thereby discouraging spontaneous interaction.

J.K. STOLLER

EDITORIAL ....................................................................................... 410

Electronic health records: We need to find needles, not stack more hay
We need a system that extends our abilities and improves the care we give—and we don’t have it yet.

W.H. MORRIS
